卷之三

1. While Abenshul has contacted us and discussed a number of points which obviously have arisen as a result of his conversations in Washington with [redacted] since his appointment, we have not been informed of the subjects discussed. In Washington, we find it rather difficult to advise Abenshul. Perhaps there is no reason why we should get involved in these current questions; in this case, we would appreciate your word to that effect soon.

2. On the other hand, we are to render support to the interested courts offices or districts, we feel that we should receive adequate briefing on the requirements of the interested parties, preferably under a new case.

3. The first problem which Abenshul brought up concerned the collection of clothing worn by homosexuals. Abenshul said that he was to explain this collection by referring to the programs of some 12 women. Although he did not object to this concept, he began to wonder whether he might not obtain primarily women's apparel in that fashion. He tentatively suggested that he should not neglect women's clothing because (a) it might be of some use and (b) the programmatic considerations might either begin to decide the validity of the entire or any particular right or interest under the nature of Abenshul's interest.

Abramski stated that he had hopes of finding one or several anti-Soviet or socialist, but that he would be unable to obtain the socialist characteristics prior to his departure. For this reason, he would have to leave the original collection in the hands of one of his trusted lieutenants. He doesn't know whether this aspect was fully appreciated at the time of the Washington conversations. At any rate, it raises some questions. He has at this time only one client, another Abramoff's Friends in New York, and he cannot be used for this purpose. Another contact mentioned by Abramoff and probably the most reliable source is one Peter Rosenberg, he is an English-speaking 35, a member of the KGB who served from Germany in December 1950, and who is currently property tax on I.L.D. at Columbia University. It seems to me in this, in February 1951, with a message for our Washington friends, but we have no other information on him. Obviously, an efficient double agent like Abramoff may brief him on any covert operation. Abramoff also mentioned the possibility of finding a source of American citizens in the future, in which case it would be desirable to have a contact with C.I.A. [redacted] set there. It will depend about two weeks in Chicago, Detroit, and Cleveland (approximately 8-12
